Judgement and approach

- demonstrate the ability, based on experience with clients, to reflect on the need for additional knowledge and skills in professional practice
- demonstrate the ability to reflect on how the practical experiences are related to the theoretical knowledge within the programme.

Contents

The student applies knowledge gained from previous courses into practice on a real enterprise case in a professional setting, either at the enterprise or at the campus, such that the gained experience is useful in the further studies.

The course includes the following elements;

- An introduction at the campus.
- Planning and delivering professional engineering design work to the client
- Participating in professional practice relevant to the main subject area
- Enterprise-related problem analysis and documentation of the problem area.

- Debriefing at the enterprise and/or campus, both a written report and an oral presentation of a reflection of the experience of professional practice.
- Business-related content tailored to the client's professional activities, with students

Type of instruction

- The course can be conducted at the enterprise or at the campus but jointly with an enterprise.
- The student works in collaboration with the staff from the enterprise and/or other students.
- Introductory lectures and final written and oral reports are done at campus.
- Lectures may be held regarding scientific writing.

The teaching is conducted in English.
