

See Me -Talk to Me

A lot of children live with parents with serious illness and several thousand children lose a parent each year. There is a gap of knowledge on children as relatives, especially related to early interventions on a basic level. Therefore, the aim of the pre- study is to develop routines, methods, referral systems and to provide education prior to the research program “See Me – Talk to Me!” This prior to a program application to FAS in 2014. The first phase (See me), will be to identify the children whose parents are physically ill or unexpectedly dies. The second phase (Talk to me), will provide and evaluate the caring, information and support offered to the children. The third phase in the research program includes the assessment of who needs support on second and third level.
